Nir Meiri is a designer with an interest in carefully selected, raw and wild materials. These are then shaped into unique clean-cut forms to create unusual products that play on the tension between the domesticated and the untamed.

The Marine Light explores the unconventional use of seaweed as a practical material for the domestic environment. Meiri hopes the introduction of this material into the world of design might inspire new thinking in the field.

The seaweed is hung on a framework of metal strings while still fresh; it shrinks as it dries out to take on the form of the lampshade. It is then coated with a preserving material.
